Google partnership makes 3,300 Council of Europe books available online

Strasbourg, 10.07.2009 – A partnership between Council of Europe Publishing and Google Books Search has made 3,300 books available online in 2009.

Council of Europe books available in the database received 230,000 visits in 6 months, with around 2.1 million pages viewed. The most highly-viewed books are legal dictionaries, key extracts of case law from the European Court of Human Rights and titles from the "Ethical Eye" series.

Google Book Search is a tool that searches the full text of books that Google scans, converts to text using optical character recognition, and stores in its digital database. This allows users to view up to 20% of the content of the books and link to the publisher's website and to other booksellers.

Council of Europe Publishing mainly produces works on human rights and international law. It also publishes works on health, social affairs, bioethics, education, culture, youth, sport, architectural heritage and environment.

Its publications include topical debates, comparative studies, monographs, proceedings of colloquies, international legal instruments, official texts etc.
